

Will the mini bulks you plan to use and refill meet the new EPA regulations that are in affect August 17, 2011?

What does the new EPA regulation mean for your re-fillable mini bulks “any container you plan to refill with Ag pesticides must be compliant with the new regulation or be completely rinsed between each fill?”

Key container requirements of the new EPA regulations:

- All openings (except vents) must have one way valves, tamper evident devices or both
- The container must have a unique method of identification (serial number)
- The container must be compatible with the pesticide
- The container must meet DOT design, construction and marking for packaging group 3, or be listed as “an approved container for refill, in your bulk refill agreement from the registrant
- EPA Est. # and net contents must be on product label affixed to the tank
- Onsite record keeping must be kept for each inspection and fill

Your “check list” for compliance:

- Bottom drain valve – must have approved one-way valve and tamper evidence device to prevent valve removal or any backfilling
- Top openings – must have approved one-way valve or tamper evidence device on a solid bung or solid lid
- Pumps – If integrally mounted, shipped and returned with the mini bulk must have an approved one way valve to prevent backfilling of the container through the pump and a tamper evidence device from the pump to the container to indicate if the pump is removed from the container. Farm Chem has tested all pumps commonly used in the ag chemical market and found that none of the commonly used pumps, for ag chemcials are compliant with the new EPA regulation.

Farm Chem has met the challenge and can provide you with ALL of the one way valves, seals, and other devices to make the mini bulks you currently have in stock, that you plan to refill, compliant with the new EPA regulation for as little as $9.00 per tank to no more than approximately $35.00 per tank.

Call Farm Chem today to order the parts you need to make YOUR refillable mini bulks EPA compliant, 800-247-1854.